Access rule: GP registration is not required for urgent care.

Routine appointment note: General Practitioner registration is recommended for planned consultations.

Interpreter note: reception can request Urdu, Punjabi, Arabic, or Polish support when volunteers are available.

Address note: proof of address may help with ordinary practice registration, but it should not block urgent advice.

Prescription note: repeat medicine requests usually need an existing practice record.

Dental note: urgent dental treatment uses a separate booking route from the Friday screening table.

Vaccination note: children should bring the red book if parents have it with them.

Asylum support note: the advice desk can help people complete registration forms after the screening session.

Visitor note: people staying with relatives can still ask for urgent help if they become unwell.

Translation note: keep the wording simple for older residents who may read the leaflet in a second language.

Queue note: families with small children may need to be directed to the side seating area.

Women group note: the blood pressure table should be placed near the privacy screen.

Pharmacy note: the late opening chemist on Albert Drive can explain non urgent medicine queries.

Community hall note: the entrance ramp should be kept clear before the Friday prayer rush.

Safeguarding note: volunteers should not record immigration details on the public sign in sheet.

Follow up note: the handout should mention where people can ask further access questions after the clinic.

Waiting area note: volunteers should leave space beside the noticeboard for wheelchair users.

Refreshment note: bottled water can be offered after blood pressure checks if supplies allow.

Volunteer rota note: bilingual helpers should rotate between the entrance table and the advice desk.

Community partner note: the youth worker may collect spare leaflets for the Saturday drop in.

Community notice: the hall caretaker asked that spare chairs are returned to the storage cupboard after the screening.

Weather note: rain on Pollokshaws Road may make the entrance mats slippery before the afternoon rush.
